This work of original speculative fiction was created in part from a mosaic of questions posed via Bacomegle’s “Spy vs. Spy” mode during the later winter, spring, summer and early autumn of 2013. The following selection of completely random conversations are presented unedited except for names and address which have been altered to protect the witless. The views expressed here-in do not necessarily represent the views of the authors and/or publisher. Yet perfectly mirror a completely stochastic cross-section of early 21st century digital society. Whether we like ~IT~ or not, this is one of the myriad of social media methods which is routinely employed as both communication and entertainment in the modern world. What are the ultimate implications? That is for you, the reader, to decide as you delve into the comedic chaos of 64 Shades of Bacomegle ~ Looking for Two Strangers...

0. Introduction

~IT~ was a chill winter evening in early 2013.

My wife and I were entertaining a circle of geeky guests when somebody suggested that we check out this new site for random webcam chatting called Bacomogle.

One friend, a brilliant (yet mammary gland fixated) neural network designer was obsessed with the potential of glimpsing some real time (albeit virtual) tatas. Despite our explanation of how to use a standard search engine to discover as many boobies as any person could possibly be interested in ogling over we decided to see what this new experience had to offer.

And so our introduction to the whirlwind experience of random chatting began.

From fellow board geeks in the Ukraine, to Russian art students, to businessmen in the Far East, to some of the strangest gaggles of drunk party goers one could imagine one-by-one we clicked through them all. Sometimes we stopped for a quick chat, but most often we just kept surfing through abstract snapshots of other people's online lives.

Unfortunately (at least as far as our one friend was concerned) the evenings melon-quest was turning up fruitless and eventually we decided to experiment with a different Bacomogle site feature. This "spy" mode allowed us to observe the conversational results of question we asked as presented to two random strangers as a catalyst for discussion.

At first not much was happening with a lot of misfires as strangers entered and egressed faster than Speedy Gonzapolis. Then we started to get more creative with our questions and something truly spectacular occurred! An amazing and unexpectedly hilarious conversation unfolded right before our very eyes. Instantly we all recognized the sheer entertainment potential of asking questions on Bacomogle.

As far as we could tell, if humour could be defined as the subversion of expectation, then we had discovered a comedy jackpot in terms of the completely random and unexpected results we were receiving.

N-Bombs!? Werewolves!? Jesus!? Supercows!? A complete mental breakdown over the propriety of song lyrics!? FEMINAZIS!? ~IT~ wasn't long before we started to assemble a collection of our favorite random conversations.

As our collection of random conversations grew we found that our own set of questions began to expand. Like what the fuck has happened to the world of today? Was this really the modern global village of instantaneous global communication? Or just a bunch of sophisticated improvisation artists out to entertain themselves? What is the purpose of humour? Do the results of this experiment constitute the origination of natural humour within a system of arbitrary information?

However, we found ourselves unable to answer these deeper questions satisfactorily in only single evening.

Further, our discussions on the topic only raised further interesting points about chaos theory. As MP3 players happily attest by repeatedly playing only certain selections for any given play list, one argument goes there is no such thing as true chaos in electronics due to the need for statistical seeds.

Even if not truly representation of chaos, Bacomegle's system when combined with the catalyst of unusual questions seemed to indicate that we were perhaps witnessing the most infantile roots of a completely random structure of "order by observation" growing within the overarching chaos of the Bacomegle data system.

The way to further our work this was to study and produce a report on the phenomenon. This work fell upon myself as your humble balladeer*. Over the spring, summer and autumn of 2013 ~IT~ has been my task to ask questions and collect for what became dubbed "The Project Bacon Experiment." As well as collate the electronic tome that you are now reading.

*Note: The character of Stranger Still as the observer is an amalgamated and automated analog of the collective observations that arose during the data collection and correlation phases.

You're now watching two strangers discourse your question!

Question to discourse:

Ever wished you could be someone else?

Stranger 1: nope

Stranger 1: you?

Stranger 2: briefly

Stranger 2: Stranger has

Stranger 1: whom?

Stranger 2: he or she just won't admit it

Stranger 1: she - and can't really think of a time that happened.

Stranger 2: hmm. a number of people, I'm sure. Lloyd Blankfein, CEO of Goldman Sachs, could be one

Stranger 1: meh

Stranger 2: Ari Emanuel. Bill fucking boss ass nigga Clinton

Stranger 1: who's Ari Emanuel?

Stranger 2: a Hollywood executive with William Morris Endeavor. He's the person Ari Gold from Entourage is based upon

Stranger 1: Clinton? no thanks. did you see how the WH aged him? and all for a BJ? lolz

Stranger 2: yeah, his Presidency aged him all for a BJ. the White House supposedly ages everyone, but people just get older. Every President lives 90+ years nowadays

Stranger 1: true - but what does he have to show for it now? like i said, i'll keep my low profile / no ostentation over that

Stranger 2: show for what? Having been a top 10 President? Still helping institute positive change around the world?

Stranger 1: well, some would disagree with the top-10 thing. and there are others who had more positive impact than him - i suppose it depends on what you value, though

Stranger 2: well, I'm not really a fan of these middle of the road wash arguments. Historians almost universally rank him very high. He was extremely popular during his Presidency, despite the Lewinsky scandal. He actually worked with Congress to get things done. Since then, he's helped provide disaster relief for countries all over the world

Stranger 2: saying there are others who has more positive impact than him is saying nothing but trying to diminish his work. Clinton has done a lot of good. And I respect the hell out of him for that

Stranger 1: true. he's also done a fair amount of "evil" (or at least un-good) - imo. though i can see why you'd want to be him. while i like him personally, i have no interest in trading places, though:)

Stranger 2: sorry, just got a phone call. and yeah, his foreign policy was not the best at all

Stranger 2: interesting

Stranger 1: np at all

Stranger 2: how old are you?

Stranger 1: 19

Stranger 1: you?

Stranger 2: 20

Stranger 1: i'm not a huge fan of some of his domestic endeavours either

Stranger 2: like what?

Stranger 1: though the attempt at a better healthcare WAS a good try

Stranger 2: oh, endeavours? someone ain't American

Stranger 1: US born, living abroad :)

Stranger 2: haha

Stranger 2: nice, where?

Stranger 1: amsterdam in summer, monaco in winter

Stranger 2: oh wow, Monaco

Stranger 1: it's pretty awesome, imo

Stranger 2: haha. I can imagine. One of my buddies used to tell people that he went to Morocco when he was little. And they were very impressed. But he later found out that it was actually Monaco

Stranger 1: haha :)

Stranger 1: as far as Clinton's domestic policies go, three "un-goods" come to mind:

Stranger 1: 1 - NAFTA and the pollution / job loss resulting from it

Stranger 1: 2 - increased criminalization of non-violent offences

Stranger 1: and 3 - the misguided assault weapons ban

Stranger 2: Agreed entirely on NAFTA. I agree on two, but there really has not been a President good on that issue recently.

Stranger 2: and three, why misguided?

Stranger 1: it was neither effective nor smart. banning weapons based on looks rather than science-based indicators seems like an epitome of a "feel-good" ineffective legislation

Stranger 1: and in the end - it had no safety impact, but did elevate costs and did rile up the conservative echelon

Stranger 2: interesting take. I have more of a constitutional problem with it. but I can see that. It is a tough issue though, and I can completely understand the approach, given recent events. Sandy Hook really tore at me because it's tough to support something that has the capacity to kill so many people (esp. children) in such a short burst of time. But banning assault weapons isn't necessarily going to stop that. still, the AWB can't really be judged against that because it was only 10 years and there were still many of them on the trip. so the conservative attempt to point out crime statistics during the time is a bit simplistic.

Stranger 2: obviously, Clinton didn't know about the recent events. but I don't know the context of the ban

Stranger 2: still many of them on the streets*

Stranger 1: just the plain reading of the law points at its uselessness... the factors that separated banned weapons from legitimate ones were mostly cosmetic.

Stranger 1: so even leaving constitutional issues aside, the AWB was not worded to actually solve anything.

Stranger 2: well, that's interesting. I didn't know that. what are you studying?

Stranger 1: i'm taking a few classes here and there (for personal interest) - but i'm not in a degree program

Stranger 1: no rush for that :)

Stranger 2: what do you wanna do?

Stranger 1: i have no firm plans - since I am under no pressure to "have to" do anything, I'm giving it a lot of thought. In the short 2-5 year term - travel more. in the longer term - no clue yet

Stranger 1: my hope is that while learning about things of interest to me, i may come across something akin to a calling

Stranger 1: something compelling to invest my time

Stranger 2: nice. haha, you must have a relaxing life. Enjoy that. I hope to travel one day as well

Stranger 1: thank you - and you should - nothing expands your horizons like travel

Stranger 1: so - what do you want to do?

Stranger 1: .. or be?

Stranger 2: sorry, haha, I need to alert you when I'm doing stuff. had to use the restroom

Stranger 2: I want to work in baseball

Stranger 1: np

Stranger 1: thats cool

Stranger 2: it's gonna be tough, but that's my passion. And I know a lot about finance. so I'm probably going to trade a lot and supplement the lower income from baseball that way

Stranger 1: that sounds like a good plan

Stranger 2: yeah, to be honest, I'm a bit focused on having a lot of money. which might not be the most virtuous goal, but I haven't had a lot growing up and I want to be in a position where I can get whatever I want

Stranger 1: can't blame you at all - it's a GREAT position to be in :)

Stranger 1: .. trust me ;)

Stranger 2: haha, thanks

Stranger 2: where are you from in the states by the way?

Stranger 1: born in Boston, but haven't lived stateside in years

Stranger 2: oh shit

Stranger 2: I went to Boston a month ago

Stranger 1: nice - how did you like it?

Stranger 2: cool city. people were a bit strange. not nearly as friendly as the people here. But I enjoyed it. Fenway was awesome. The conference I went to was well worth it

Stranger 1: where's "here" for you?

Stranger 2: West Virginia

Stranger 1: ah - beautiful countryside there

Stranger 2: oh yes. It's awesome

Stranger 2: I hate to leave, but I have some stuff to finish before my class in an hour

Stranger 1: np

Stranger 1: it was fun chatting with you!

Stranger 1: *waves*

Stranger 2: yes, it was awesome. Good luck in everything!

Stranger 1: yeahh

Stranger 2: do u live with ur mom or dad?

Stranger 2: urdad right

Stranger 2: does ur dad let u grow now?

Stranger 1: dad yeah lol

Stranger 2: i mean smoke

Stranger 1: my dad use to grow and sell

Stranger 2: i mean like after

Stranger 2: u guys smoked

Stranger 1: he told me how to do it outside

Stranger 2: so if he catches u growing

Stranger 2: in hyour closet he would get mad uh

Stranger 2: huh

Stranger 2: my friend did that in high school

Stranger 1: no, when he was like 19 and 20 he grew it

Stranger 2: so he wouldnt care?

Stranger 1: i dunno, i dont think he would

Stranger 2: if he doesnt care, practice

Stranger 2: with tomatos first

Stranger 2: because u dont want to risk getting caught

Stranger 1: yeah

Stranger 1: lol

Stranger 2: and have a shitty

Stranger 2: ass plant as well

Stranger 2: if you get caught at least have some dank

Stranger 2: and your dad would be like fine

Stranger 2: fuck it

Stranger 2: if its some schwag bro

Stranger 2: or some shit

Stranger 1: yeah they have these helicopters that fly around low looking for weed plants, like everybody down here is a pot head

Stranger 2: do you have a big house?

Stranger 2: like a decent size closet that your dad doenst check

Stranger 1: yeah iguess, 5bedroom, 2 stories

Stranger 1: idunno i gyess it s normal

Stranger 2: awesome, you can probably 2-3 plants without him noticing imo

Stranger 2: unless you have a spare room

Stranger 2: u never goes to

Stranger 2: but i wouldnt risk it

Stranger 2: cause i mean cmon lol ur dad is going to walk into one of those rooms haha

Stranger 1: yeah lmao

Stranger 2: haha, so you know where to get seeds?

Stranger 1: yeah, i have a bunch of reggie ones because i save all my stems and seeds, but the good i get never really has seeds

Stranger 2: i see i see

Stranger 2: yeah

Stranger 2: regs always have seeds in the bud

Stranger 2: i havent really smoked regs since i was 15 though, cause regs and dank

Stranger 1: yeah, that shit is loaded with em haha

Stranger 2: arent that diff in price here

Stranger 2: quarter is 90 for me for dank and probably 60 ore 70

Stranger 2: for regs

63. Well, what would you do different?

63.1

You're now watching two strangers discourse your question!

Question to discourse:

Well, what would you do different?

Stranger 1: Inglis breaks down the purpose - the actual purpose - of modern schooling into six basic functions, anyone of which is enough to curl the hair of those innocent enough to believe the three traditional goals of education listed earlier:

1. The adjustive or adaptive function. Schools are to establish fixed habits of reaction to authority. This, of course, precludes critical judgment completely. It also pretty much destroys the idea that useful or interesting material should be taught, because you can't test for reflexive obedience until you know whether you can make kids learn, and do, foolish and boring things.
2. The integrating function. This might well be called "the conformity function;" because its intention is to make children as alike as possible. People who conform are predictable, and this is of great use to those who wish to harness and manipulate a large labor force.
3. The diagnostic and directive function. School is meant to determine each student's proper social role. This is done by logging evidence mathematically and anecdotally on cumulative records. As in "your permanent record." Yes, you do have one.
4. The differentiating function. Once their social role has been "diagnosed;" children are to be sorted by role and trained only so far as their destination in the social machine merits – and not one step further. So much for making kids their personal best.
5. The selective function. This refers not to human choice at all but to Darwin's theory of natural selection as applied to what he called "the favored races." In short, the idea is to help things along by consciously attempting to improve the breeding stock. Schools are meant to tag the unfit – with poor grades, remedial placement, and other punishments - clearly enough that their peers will accept them as inferior and effectively bar them from the reproductive sweepstakes. That's what all those little humiliations from first grade onward were intended to do: wash the dirt down the drain.
6. The propaedeutic function. The societal system implied by these rules will require an elite group of caretakers. To that end, a small fraction of the kids will quietly be taught how to manage this continuing project, how to watch over and control a population deliberately dumbed down and declawed in order that government might proceed unchallenged and corporations might never want for obedient labor.

67. Epilogue ~ We Shant Go There, 'Tis a Silly Palace

Suggested listening: Love Club, Lorde

NOTE: The following speculative fiction takes places in a future that is as close as just one day from now, in a place which is stranger than fiction.

After years of saving to purchase a Virtuality compatible A.V.A.T.A.R. Skin, Rachel, a young professional, finally has the chance to explore the place all her friends have been talking about....

Kingdom Cum-A-Lot!

(The future's most extensive & all-inclusive virtual reality cat house, barcade & casino.)

During her explorations Rachel has ended up meeting a group of virtual adventurers hanging out at The Sweet $pot, one of Kingdom Cum-A-Lot's more popular lounges for singles looking to hook up for Cypher $ex.

Officially known by the clan name "Hill's Angles" the group includes Smorgus Borg, a Bio-mechanical Reversengineerior, Drawing the Agro along with his epic mount Spawn Point and Farfig Gnuton the Satyr Barberian.

Rachel later learned that Barberians are a unique Kingdom Cum-A-Lot character class which combines the most useful traits of barbers, librarians and barbarians.

After sharing several rounds of Pan-galactic Golden Showers, the Sweet Spot's signature virtual cocktail, Farfig Gnuton finally works up enough courage to ask Rachel back to his private domain palace to look at his etchings.

Rachel has been dying to try virtual $ex for ages and finds Farfig's A.V.A.T.A.R. attractive enough to agree. Besides, he seems to have enough erudite knowledge to captivate her interest for the time being. Unfortunately, when he said "etchings" he really meant "etchings" as he is actually a conservationist and collector of some of the rarest documents in all digital existence.

"Take a look at this." He said, unrolling a long scroll which at first looked more like a strip of Bacon than document.

"What is ~IT~!?" asked Rachel.

"This is an etching taken from the original Salt Sea Scroll edition of The Bacon Code in which author and socio-anthropologist Dyl W. reveals the fundamental principles of Bacon for the first time." Explained Farfig, grateful for the company of a beautiful A.V.A.T.A.R. as opposed to his ramshackle group of adventuring cohorts.

"Bacon?" Asked Rachel somewhat incredulous, "What the heck has Bacon got to do with ~IT~!?"

"Oh, Bacon is the most fundamental principle in all pataphysics. ~IT~ is the route of Olfactorithmetics." said Farfig, proud of his knowledge of the inner workings of cypherspace.

"What's that?" asked Rachel.

"Greater than regular physics or even metaphysical existence, pataphysics is the exploration of what may be the greater extenuating or containing circumstances of existence and our experiential relation to ~IT~." Farfig quickly realized that he was talking over Rachel's head and ~IT~ wasn't just the giant floating golden question mark over her head that finally clued him in.

Rachel was stilled puzzle and didn't realize that ~IT~ was showing through her A.V.A.T.A.R. as she tried to wrap her mind around the concept of consummating Bacon as a self-aware system of cosmic exploration.

"Basically, Bacon is what makes all this possible." said Farfig.

"Virtuality you mean?" replied Rachel, finally starting to clue in.

"Yes." answered Farfig, referring back to the scroll.

"Where did you get such an unusual thing?" asked Rachel.

"Oh, they're available in the Kingdom Cum-A-Lot Gift Shop." Smiled Farfig, lying about the origin of his copy which was much older than the cheap rip-offs that Kingdom Cum-A-Lot was now hawking. But he knew that Rachel wouldn't know the difference and probably would not be impressed by the story of how his crew had managed to lift ~IT~ from the department of digital treasures.

"I don't understand these symbols, what do they mean?" asked Rachel, now intrigued to understand more about the inner workings of the virtual world she was visiting for the first time.

"~IT~ all starts here with one of Dyl W.'s most famous observations." Farfig read aloud from the scroll for Rachel, who still hadn't gotten the hang of her A.V.A.T.A.R.'s Bacobabble translator.

"~IT~ is said that the saga of any legendarily epic oddyssey is to begin where ~IT~ ends.

Therefore, should you ever happen to have the opportunity to choose a super power, might I suggest Bacon? ~IT~ may not make sense for a very, very long time. But when ~IT~ finally clicks into place you will possess the biggest $hit-eating grin of all time." ~ Dyl W.

"Fascinating, what about this one? ~IT~ looks like a funny script or calligraphy in a cast iron frying pan flying through space?" asked Rachel.

"Aha, good eye! That glyph represents the creation of the Bacominverse." replied Farfig.

Again he read the translation aloud for Rachel, "In the beginning there was nothing and Good said; 'Let there be Bacon!' And there was still nothing. But, at least you could smell ~IT~ cooking... Ohm... Nom... Nom!"

"What is that supposed to mean?" asked Rachel.

"~IT~ isn't supposed to mean anything. ~IT~ means what ~IT~ means." replied Farfig.

"Which is?" Rachel asked, enjoying this line of Bacon-flavoured questioning.

"Bacon is a way of understanding the greater extenuating circumstances of existence in terms of sensory experience which proceeds everything except the concept of nothingness." said Farfig.

"Why does ~IT~ say that Good created Bacon then?" asked Rachel.

"Oh, that's part of the concept of Baconparsimony." explained Farfig.

"What's that? Rachel continued to press.

"Basically the concept that Bacon tastes good and that personality goes a long way." Rachel looked little puzzle, so Farfig continued in the most simple terms he could imagine for what was actually a rather complex topic. "~IT~ is an explanation of why ~IT~ is better to be than not to be."

"Sounds like Shakespeare to me." replied Rachel nonchalantly. "What's this?" Rachel pointed at the scroll, "~IT~ looks like an equals sign made from Bacon?"

"Ironic you should say that." Replied Farfig, continuing. "That is the symbol for Bacon Verisimilitude or the similarity of all things to Bacon."

"Bacosimilitude, what's that!?" asked Rachel, now intrigued.

"That's where Dyl. W. conclusively proved that there is only one thing that smells like Bacon and that is in fact Bacon." Replied Farfig, who always enjoyed teaching Neo-Bacophytes the ropes.

"How did he do that?" asked Rachel.

"Well have you ever heard of the great playwright William Shakespeare?" asked Farfig in return.

"Yes, who hasn't?" replied Rachel with yet another question of her own. "Besides, I just mentioned him."

"Oh, so you did! But you might be surprised at how ignorant must people are of fine art, my dear." replied Farfig with a smile before continuing. "Well, Dyl W. once observed that to this day we do not know if the works of William Shakespeare, a poet laureate of such renown that he is still known as THE BARD, are in whole or in part attributable to one Sir Francis Bacon."

"Never heard of him." said Rachel, shaking her head to reiterate. "Who is that?"

"He was a contemporaneous speculative fiction writer of Shakespeares who also had a great interest in cryptography." explained Farfig.

"Sounds interesting." replied Rachel.

"He was quite the maverick really, believing in both Panacea which is universal medicine and the Philosopher's Stone or universal solvent. Of course Dyl W. was the one who fully identified these ideas as conceptualizations of humour." said Farfig.

"Oh, I see. And this?" asked Rachel, pointing to a different Bacon glyph.

"That's the first rule of Bacon Club." replied Farfig.

"Which is?" asked Rachel.

"Tell Everyone!" Farfig grinned rebelliously.

"And this one?" Rachel pointed to a Baconized symbol that resembled an ancient highway.

"That one reads; Why did the Bacon Cross the road?" translated Farfig.

"I don't know." answered Rachel.

"To get to the other fried!" They shared a corny laugh.

"This is where Dyl W. first revealed the nature of Shakespeare's so-called undiscovered country and what would eventually go on to become our Virtuality." Further explained Farfig.

"That's where we are now?" asked Rachel. "The Virtual Artificial Reality space that contains Kingdom Cum-A-Lot?"

"Yes, plus all individual private domains, such as this one." answered Farfig.

Rachel Looked around, Farfig's palace was actually well-appointed and contained many curiosities.

"You must be rich!" exclaimed Rachel.

"Rich were ~IT~ counts and poor where ~IT~ don't!" replied Farfig.

"And this one?" Asked Rachel returning to her investigation of Farfig's mysterious Bacon scroll.

"That's when Dyl W. initially became known as The Bay Khan Ceaser, the first deacon and beacon of Bacon." said Farfig.

"Why did he call himself that?" asked Rachel.

"Actually, legend has ~IT~ that he considered The Bacon Burgher too punny." replied Farfig.

"And what is he saying here?" asked Rachel, pointing at the speech balloon in front of the glyph which she had come to recognize as Dyl W.

"Bacon, lettuce tomato this, our daily bread." smiled Farfig.

"I don't understand." said Rachel.

"~IT~ is part of the humorous recognition of self-consumation which came about due to the discovery of Bacophenia." said Farfig.

"Bacophenia? What's that!?" asked Rachel.

"Bacon is as Bcon does, however Bacophenia is a little harder to explain than just that." said Farfig, searching for the words "Well, in a nutshell Bacophenia is basically a way of understanding self-creation which really resonated with Dyl W.'s audience. ~IT~ is a way of perceiving the cosmos that reveled in revealing the strange parallel connections of all mythological existence, as well as the base absurdities contained therein."

"I've often felt my life was rather absurd." observed Rachel. "No wonder the concept resonated with folks."

"Yes, ~IT~ has been observed by some historians that Dyl W. firmly believed in an absurd spirituality and the accompanying humility of irony. As ridiculous as ~IT~ may have seemed at the time, to him Bacon was the self-aware and self-evident code or framework of all existence within the Bacominverse." Farfig said.

Rachel looked at a somewhere familiar Bacon glyph, "What's this one mean. I'm sure I've see ~IT~ somewhere before."

"That's the Bacomegle symbol, for Dyl W. that's where ~IT~ all began." Farfig said with a grin.

"Oh, wait, I'm sure I saw an eBook in the Kingdom Cum-A-Lot Lyceum earlier with the Bacomegle symbol!" Rachel realized with an exclamation.

"Probably." said Farfig. "They have one of the few remaining copies of the original."

"Why is ~IT~ so famous?" asked Rachel.

"Well, 64 Shades of Bacomegle is when Dyl W. finally started to gain attention for his Bacon theory and is what became the foundation of today's Virtuality technology. Before that Dyl W. was just another jaded technician." said Farfig with a sigh.

"Oh, I remember that story as well from..." Rachel paused, attempting to recall her earlier adventures. "What was his first novella called? Something like 420?"

"419 actually." Farfig politely corrected. "And yes, before his work on 64 Shades of Bacomegle with the discovery of Bacon and what he dubbed the information ecosystem, Dyl W. was nothing more than a washed up technician and wannabe speculative fiction author."

"How did things turn around then?" asked Rachel.

"64 Shades of Bacomegle contained a link to The Bacon Ribbon Project. You have to imagine that this was before anybody truly took the importance of the digital economy seriously. Back then concepts like crowd-sourcing and flat rates were in their infancy and nothing like the equitable virtual system of exchange we use today." Farfig explained.

"Sounds intriguing, is this the address where people went to participate?" asked Rachel, pointing to <http://www.maycontainbacon.com> which she surmised was an ancient World Wide Web addressing of some sort.

"Yes, The Bacon Ribbon Project was Dyl W.'s first connection to a larger audience who could appreciate the subtle sense of humour of what he was presenting and directly supported his research of Bacon as the ultimate creative farce in the cosmos. As well as the third component of what became known as the Dyl W. Thrillology with Kingdom Cum-A-Lot presents... COCKZILLA!" explained Farfig.

"You mean that dreadful 8D movie experience I had implanted in my memory earlier at the Kingdom Cum-A-Lot DeJamesia Totally Recalled Theatre?" Rachel asked, cringing as she recalled her experiences from earlier in the evening*. (**As told recounted in Kingdom Cum-A-Lot Presents... COCKZILLA! Coming this XXX-Mas!*)

"No, actually. COCKZILLA! was the original eBook project which gathered Dyl W.'s initial observations that humanity was just a bunch of Dump Monkeys hurtling through space on an organic ship and for the first time presented a bright and realistic hope for the future."

"Why did he do ~IT~ that way?" asked Rachel.

"Nobody is really sure, but ~IT~ has often been speculated that COCKZILLA! was meant to represent something halfway between fantasy and fiction in order to help wake people up to the reality of their present and show them real hope for the future." Said Farfig.

"What else did the Bacon Ribbon Project have to offer?" Asked Rachel.

"Well, flat-rate donators to The Bacon Ribbon Project received a one-of-a-kind collectable Bacon Ribbon T-Shirt." explained Farfig, pointing out a very worn t-shirt scrap on the wall of his palace which was had been mounted in a glass case.

Kind of like the one in this picture?" Asked Rachel, returning to the scroll.

"Yes, exactly!" Smiled Farfig.

"What about this gyph?" Asked Rachel.

"Oh, that's when Dyl W. created an experiment that implemented knowledge gleaned from random chatting in order to create the first Artificial Intelligence to pass the Turing Test for self-awareness."

"How did he do that?"

"That my dear is a tale for another day, but I can tell you none of ~IT~ would have happened without support for The Bacon Ribbon Project.

A disembodied voice begins our tale; "The suspension of disbelief is the framework by which the imagination is engaged."

The scene begins to fade in to the back of a man's head looking out over a distant green.

"Holy $hit, boy! I've heard some whoppers in my day, but that has got to be one of the most outrageous tales I've ever heard tell of! You must be a member of Master Pöets society!" Said the man in black who had been conducting the interview with an accent that made Pöets sound like "POO-ITS"

What's that!?" Replied the author, genuinely worn and bedraggled after the intense interrogation he had just been through.

"So you've never heard the saying Quando Omnibus Flatulus before!?"

The author looked back, blankly, finally raising the eyebrow of curiosity in order to get the man in black to continue.

"~IT~ means that I'm somewhat of a bullshitter myself, but occasionally I care to listen to an expert. So please carry on, son."

The author grinned slightly and shook his head. "Does this mean that I'm free to go?"

"Yes, you're free to go. But don't let me ever catch you back here because of your story telling again, got that!?" Said the man in black with a look that reinforced his seriousness.

"Yes sir!" replied the author without the slightest hint of sarcasm.

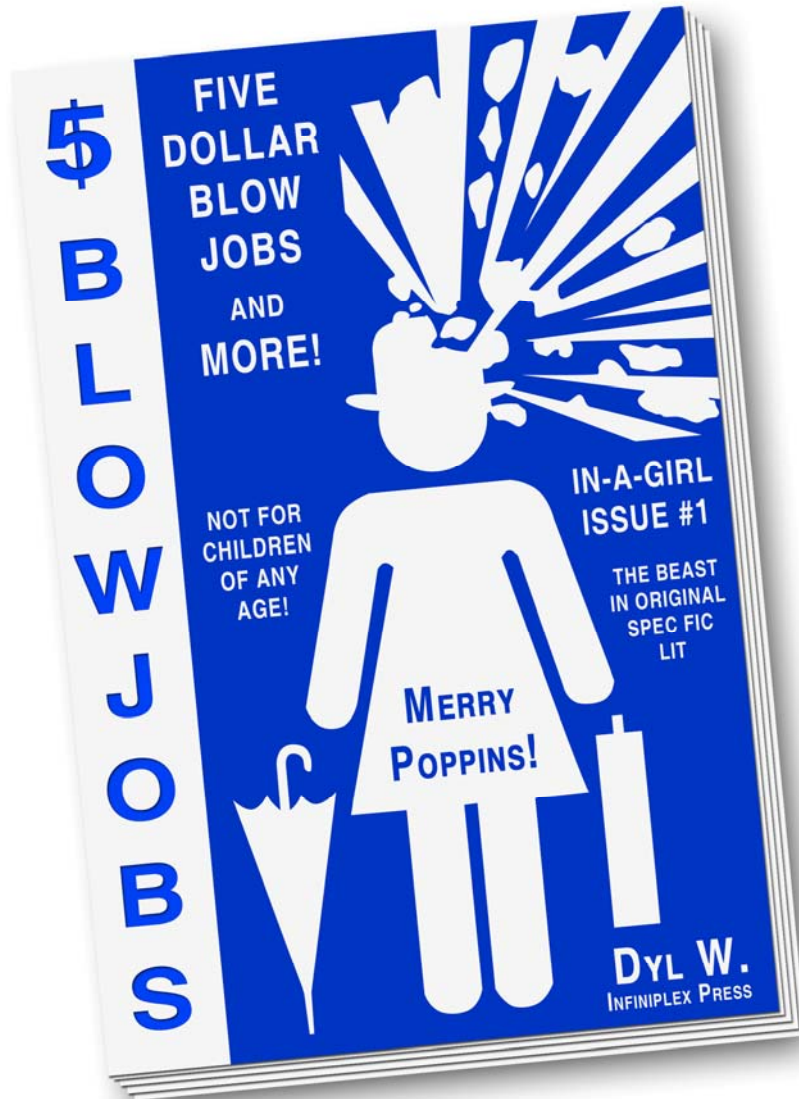

As the author got up to leave the taller of the two mercenary soldiers which had been guarding him during the interrogation stopped him with a long muscled arm across the chest. "There's just one thing I don't understand BERK, why Bacon?"

The author sighed, looked directly in the soldiers eyes and said "Because when you smoke Bacon and feel good about ~IT~ only the pigs get mad!"

The soldier stopped for a moment, as if processing the joke. Then chuckled under his breath covering the fact that he still didn't get ~IT~ and let the author out the entrance of the hidden base. As the author reached the sidewalk his gate changed somewhat and...
